summer in Verdun

the graveyards of Verdun are full
with summer flowers

children are playing
hide and seek
among the crosses

their parents
    coke in hand
keep looking for the names of their grand fathers
on the wooden beams

verifying the family album

swallows dive steeply
under darkening clouds
slowly approaching from the west
you try your best
to give them shapes
and faces

them
who then in noisy greyish nights fell out of life

    bright red leaves
    crimsoned prematurely
    by sudden frost

W. H., Verdun, July 1994

telephone call

decisive words
    take their time

they reveal their significance like buds unfolding nourished by the soil of doubt the rain of memory and meditation gradually to the troubled soul

until the flower
    of loss

    suddenly
    in full bloom

makes you tremble
at its pristine
    relentless
    beauty
