ABOUT THIS ISSUE

As was promised at the end of 1994, this issue is the 1995 volume in total: a combination of Number 1 (which is usually published in June/July) and Number 2 which is published at the end of the year. Thank you for remembering the message that was sent to you and for not wondering why the mid-year issue did not arrive. My sabbatical leave in the USA was very profitable and I have returned to Australia knowing more than I did when I arrived in Los Angeles early in June!

I consider that Volume 14 of IJTS is typical of our style in that it contains a wide variety of types of material. This ability to look far and wide and not be restrained in our selections for this Journal because of a rigid ideology is something that we hold dear. Clearly, not every piece of writing that we publish concurs completely with our own points of view, but we consider it extremely important not to edit manuscripts or poems to the point where, clone like, they reflect our own personal realities.

I am pleased to inform you that you will have a guest editor next year. One of our Associate Editors is ready to take on the journal for a year and I am satisfied that you will be more than happy with Denise Lajoie's work. You've already seen significant input from her in the supplement that came out earlier this year Entering the light: voices of Russian transpersonalism. She, with the support of Sam Shapiro, will have treats in store for you in 1996. I truly appreciate their commitment and that of all the other editors who, during this year, have contributed their efforts to this journal.
